We woke up around 9:30am after a much needed nights rest. My plan was to get up earlier to read but I was completely exhausted. We began the day eating as a group and then worshiping together.

After worship we discussed our daily activities and all agreed that we felt God wanted us to do a prayer walk from one end of the town to the other. We also felt like the Lord wanted us to make a cross and put it somewhere in the town in honor of his name. Lloyd was going to head up that project.

We headed to the Westside of town to one of the Prayer towers that the Buddhists go to each day. We acted just like the Buddhists do and walked around the prayer tower in the clockwise direction. The prayers were very intense because of the darkness that surrounded the towers.
After a few rounds of private prayer and open prayer we headed to the center of town where we encountered a couple people who really didn’t want us there. They were of a different state and just pointed at us as though they were possessed. Everyone else in the town surrounded us and saw the Love that was pouring out from the Holy Spirit.

When we reached the end of the town we found the other Idol that the Buddhists worshiped. This area was huge and took about ten minutes to get around it once. For your knowledge the prayer flags are given to the gods as much as possible by the Buddhists. This is a works Religion and in order for the Buddhists to have a better next life they need to do as many works as possible. The brightly colored flags are so the gods can see them and the higher they are placed the closer to the gods they are. These prayer flags are all over this part of the region mostly at the peaks of mountains.

This was a very special day of prayer for this city and we just met a major contact for the city that will help us out for our next major adventure, Track Bombing. We are going to be escorted into a Buddhist Temple in the day time and in the night time between 12:00am and 4:00am we will be placing tracts amongst the Temple. I am getting goose bumps thinking about it right now. Pray for us.
